CARAVAN® Survey for SAMHSA on Addictions and Recovery

Introduction

This report presents the findings of 11 global questions related to addiction, prevention, recovery, and stigma related to addictions. These questions were part of a nationally representative CARAVAN® telephone survey conducted from August 29 to September 1, 2008. The target audience was a national probability sample of 1,010 adults, 18 years of age and older living in private households in the continental United States. All results in this report are weighted by four variables (age, sex, geographic region, and race) to ensure reliable and accurate representation of the total population, 18 years of age and older. Differences that are statistically significant at the 95% confidence level are noted. The margin of error for this data is +/- 3%. The full set of questions is included in Appendix A. Verbatim comments are available by request from SAMHSA's Office of Communications.

Findings—Highlights

- Half of all adults 18 and older know someone in recovery from addiction to alcohol, illicit drugs, or prescription drugs.

Age

- Respondents age 65 and older are least likely to state they know someone in recovery from addiction.
- In general, the older a person is, the more likely he or she is to think less of someone who is in recovery from drugs or alcohol, and the less likely he or she is to feel comfortable with someone in recovery from alcohol or drug abuse.
- Respondents age 65 and older are least likely to believe that substance addictions can be prevented. However, more than half do believe they can be prevented.

- Respondents in the 25- to 34-year age bracket are the most positive that a person in recovery from addiction could go on to live a productive life. Those age 65 and older were the least so.

Stigma

- Less than one-fifth of the respondents agree that they would think less of a friend or relative if they discovered that person is in recovery from addiction.
- Almost one-third would think less of a person with a current addiction.
- Almost three-quarters of young adults agree with the statement that people who are addicted to alcohol could stop if they had enough willpower. Twice as many young adults age 18 to 24 believe that willpower could play a decisive role in recovery from addiction than does the general population.

Prevention

- Almost two-thirds of respondents agree that addiction to illicit drugs such as cocaine and heroin can be prevented.
- Respondents age 25 to 34 are the most positive that substance addictions can be prevented.
- Respondents from households with children are more likely than those in households without children to agree that substance addictions can be prevented.

Drugs versus Alcohol

- People tend to view addiction to drugs differently than alcohol. In general, respondents are more comfortable with someone in recovery from alcohol abuse than drug addiction. (See chart, Question 5).
- Overall, respondents feel that persons who are addicted to illicit drugs such as cocaine and heroin are much more of a danger to society than those addicted to alcohol, prescription drugs, or marijuana.

Gender

- Females are much more likely than males to agree that individuals who are addicted to any of the substances mentioned in the survey are dangers to society. This is particularly true in relation to alcohol addictions.
- Women are more likely than men to agree that a person in recovery from an addiction to prescription drugs or illicit drugs can live a productive life.
- The percentage of Americans who agree that treatment programs can help people with substance addictions is slightly higher than the percentage of those who agree that people in recovery can live a productive life. Respondents see programs to help people with addictions to alcohol, marijuana, and prescription drugs more favorably than treatment programs designed to help people with addictions to illicit drugs such as heroin, cocaine, or methamphetamines.

Marijuana

- Marijuana appears to be less of an immediate issue with respondents than the other substances mentioned. Less than one-fifth (18%) of respondents mentioned knowing anyone in recovery from marijuana, compared to twice that (41%) for alcohol. In the list of substances that pose a danger to society, marijuana ranked last among all demographic groups (age, race, gender, ethnicity, and income).

Detailed findings from the various questions are discussed in the pages that follow.

Recovery

- Approximately three-quarters of the population believe that recovery is possible from marijuana, alcohol, and prescription drugs. However, only 58% believe that a person can fully recover from addiction to other illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines.
- In general, as Americans grow older, they are less likely to agree that recovery from substance addiction is possible. Women are more likely (62%) than men (54%) to agree that a person can fully recover from addiction to illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines.
- The majority of respondents agree with the statement that people in recovery from addictions can live a productive life. Respondents felt most positive about people in recovery from addictions to marijuana, alcohol, and prescription drugs (82%, 78%, and 76%, respectively) than those in recovery from addiction to other illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines (61%).

What “Recovery from Addiction” Means to the American Public

Question 1:

When you hear the phrase “recovery from addiction,” what does that mean to you?

In general, the responses vary from mentioning specific addictions (some substance-oriented and some not) to more general statements on the value of recovery and what that could mean to a person. While verbatim responses are best used by reading through the list as they were recorded, there is value in classifying the comments into categories based on their content or key themes, as below. For example, the frequency table shows that over one-third of respondents mentioned drugs in their response to the question, “When you hear the phrase, ‘recovery from addiction,’ what does that mean to you?” Approximately one-quarter of respondents mentioned alcohol.

Some verbatim responses are quite negative, such as the following:

- “You finally got a backbone.”
- “A junkie.”
- “Temporary fix.”

However, the majority of comments on what recovery from addiction means are very positive. For example:

- “Somebody is trying to change their life.”
- “A drug- or alcohol-addicted person chooses to get sober and stay sober. A former alcoholic or drug addict is always in recovery.”

General Response Category	Weighted Number of Respondents	Percentage of Respondents
Specific Addictions	438	44%
Drugs	375	38%

TOTAL WEIGHTED NUMBER OF RESPONDENTS	1,000
NOTE: Some respondents mentioned more than one of the topic areas; therefore, the aggregate number of comments exceeds the total number of respondents.

- “You’re getting better.”
- “It means being able to overcome the addiction and resume a normal life. Because just stopping the behavior of your addiction is not full recovery. Because to be fully recovered you have to get back into life.”
- “You got over a drug or alcohol problem.”
- “Somebody that’s trying to turn their life around.”
- “That you have beat what you were addicted to and have to be aware of what you are doing in the future.”
- “Drug user trying to get his life back together.”
- “That someone had a problem with alcohol or drugs, they got help, and then they woke up and they aren’t doing it anymore. They realized that they had a problem and they went for assistance; they accepted the assistance and they recovered. Then they go and help other people.”
- “Returning to a normal lifestyle—freedom from addiction—complete deliverance.”
- “Someone that’s recovering from drugs or alcohol and is capable of living a normal life.”
- “People who are having an addiction problem and are seeking help to deal with it as opposed to people who and a problem and don’t want help.”

Personal Connection to Addiction and Recovery

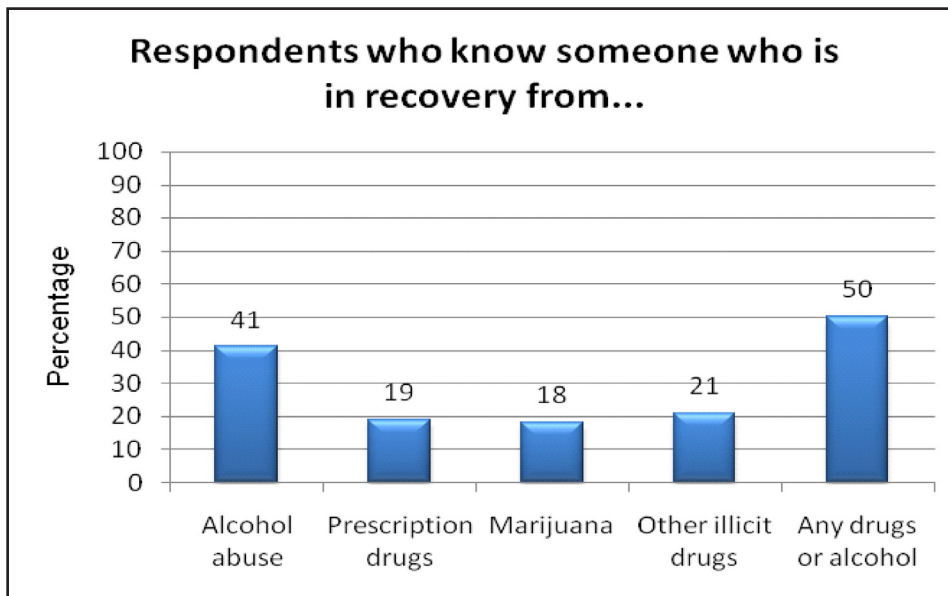

Question 2:

Do you know anyone PERSONALLY who is in recovery from ...

- Alcohol abuse
- Use of cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines
- Misuse of prescription drugs, such as painkillers, sleep aids, or anti-anxiety medication
- Use of marijuana

For all categories of substances, respondents aged 65 and older are least likely to state that they knew someone in recovery from addiction.

Overall, approximately twice as many respondents (41%) report knowing someone in recovery from alcohol abuse, compared with marijuana, other illicit drugs, or prescription drugs (18%, 21%, and 19% respectively). Knowing someone in recovery from marijuana use was strongly associated with age—28% of respondents age 18 to 34 state that they personally know someone in recovery from marijuana use. Only 12% of respondents age 55 and older know someone in recovery from marijuana use.¹

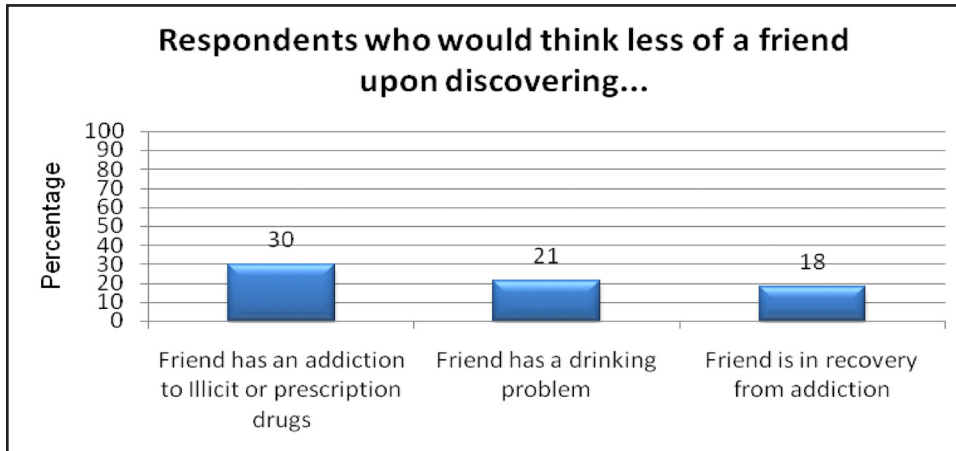

¹Please note that for this and several subsequent questions, beliefs around marijuana were polled separately from beliefs pertaining to other illicit drugs.

Stigma

Question 3:

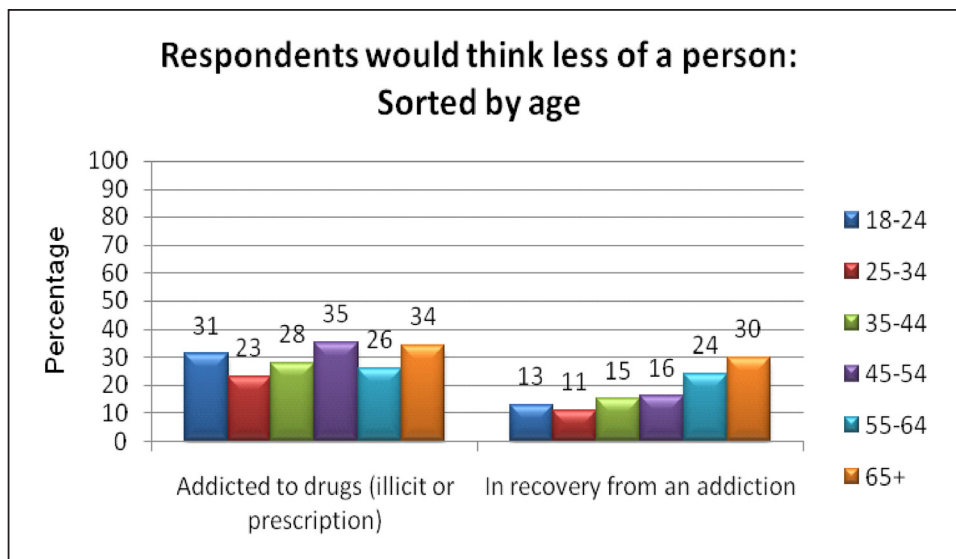

You would think less of a friend or relative if you discovered . . .

- A. They have an addiction to drugs, including illicit drugs, such as marijuana or cocaine, or prescription medications
- B. They have a drinking problem
- C. They are in recovery from addiction to drugs or alcohol

Less than one-fifth (18%) of respondents agreed that they would think less of a friend or relative if they discovered that person is in recovery from addiction to drugs or alcohol. However, considerably more respondents (30%) agreed that they would think less of a person who has a current addiction, including illicit drug use, or the misuse of prescription drugs.

In general, the older a person is, the more likely he or she is to think less of someone who is in recovery from drugs or alcohol, though age does not seem to have as much bearing on opinions of individuals with a current addiction to drugs.

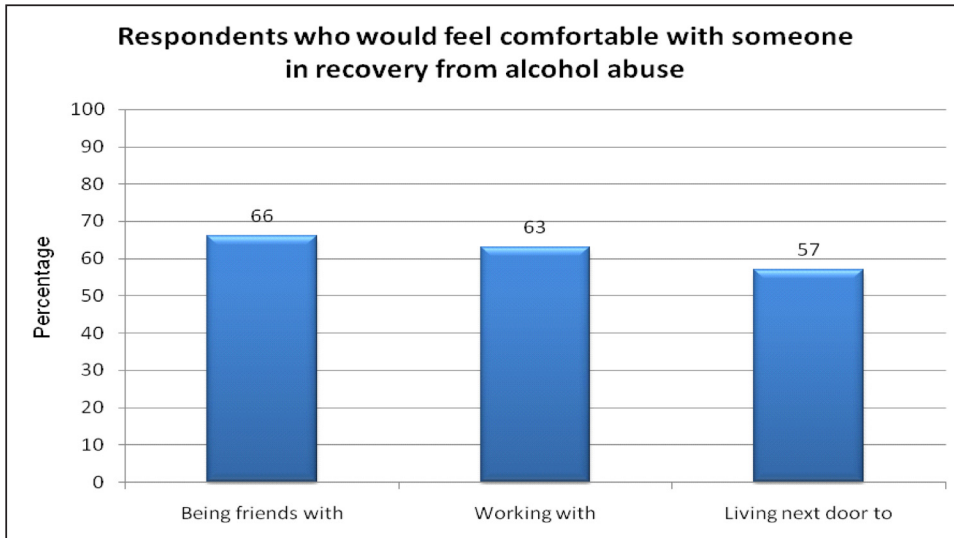

Income is also positively associated with negative opinions of others in recovery. Those with an income of less than $25,000 per year are most likely to agree that they would think less of a person in recovery from addiction to drugs or alcohol (29%). Those with an income of $75,000 per year or more are least likely (11%) to agree that they would think less of a person in recovery. Race does not appear to be associated with respondents' opinions of others with addictions or in recovery.

Question 4:

You would be comfortable . . .

- A. BEING FRIENDS WITH someone who is in recovery from alcohol abuse
- B. WORKING WITH someone who is in recovery from alcohol abuse
- C. LIVING NEXT DOOR to someone who is in recovery from alcohol abuse

Well over half of respondents agree that they would feel comfortable associating with someone who is in recovery from alcohol abuse. More respondents agree that they would feel comfortable being friends with a recovering alcoholic (66%) than living next door to a recovering alcoholic (57%).

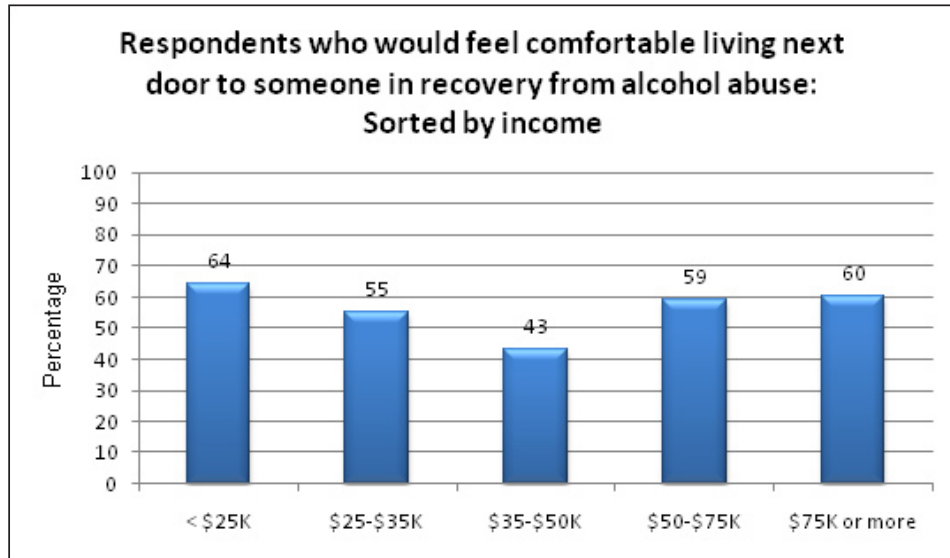

For each category of relationship, respondents age 65 or older are the least likely to agree that they would feel comfortable. Respondents age 25 to 34 are the most likely to agree that they would feel comfortable.

The presence of children in the household makes no difference in whether or not respondents agree that they feel comfortable living next door to someone who is in recovery from alcohol abuse (58% of those with children and 56% of those without).

Respondents on both ends of the household income scale are much more likely to agree that they would feel comfortable living next door to someone in recovery from alcohol abuse than would those with an income of $35,000-$50,000 per year.

Question 5:

And would you be comfortable . . .

- A. BEING FRIENDS WITH someone who is in recovery from drug addiction
- B. WORKING WITH someone who is in recovery from drug addiction
- C. LIVING NEXT DOOR TO someone who is in recovery from drug addiction

In contrast with the previous question about people in recovery from alcohol abuse, fewer people agree that they would feel comfortable associating with someone in recovery from a drug addiction. Still, over half of those surveyed (57%) agree that they would feel comfortable being friends with someone in recovery from drug addiction. Slightly less than half (46%) agree that they would feel comfortable living next door.

Respondents age 65 and older are the least likely to agree that they would feel comfortable associating with someone in recovery from drug addiction, with only 41% comfortable being friends with, 42% comfortable working with someone, and 41% comfortable living next door to someone in recovery from drug addiction.

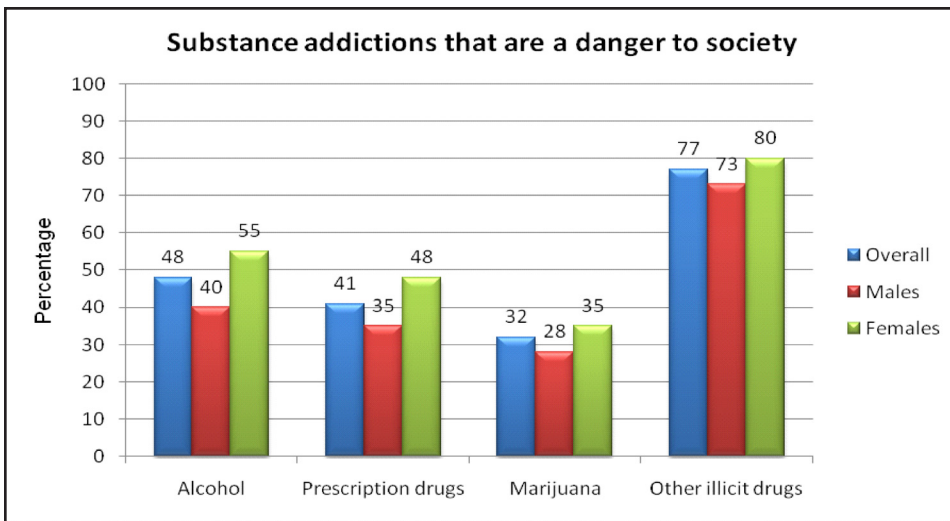

Similarly to the question about those in recovery from alcohol abuse, the presence of children in the household has a negligible effect on whether or not respondents reported that they would feel comfortable living next door to someone in recovery from a drug addiction (48% with children, 45% without children).

Question 6:

How much do you agree or disagree that a person with an addiction to the following substances is a danger to society?

- A. Illicit drugs, such as heroin, cocaine, or methamphetamines
- B. Alcohol
- C. Prescription drugs, such as painkillers, sleep aids, or anti-anxiety medications
- D. Marijuana

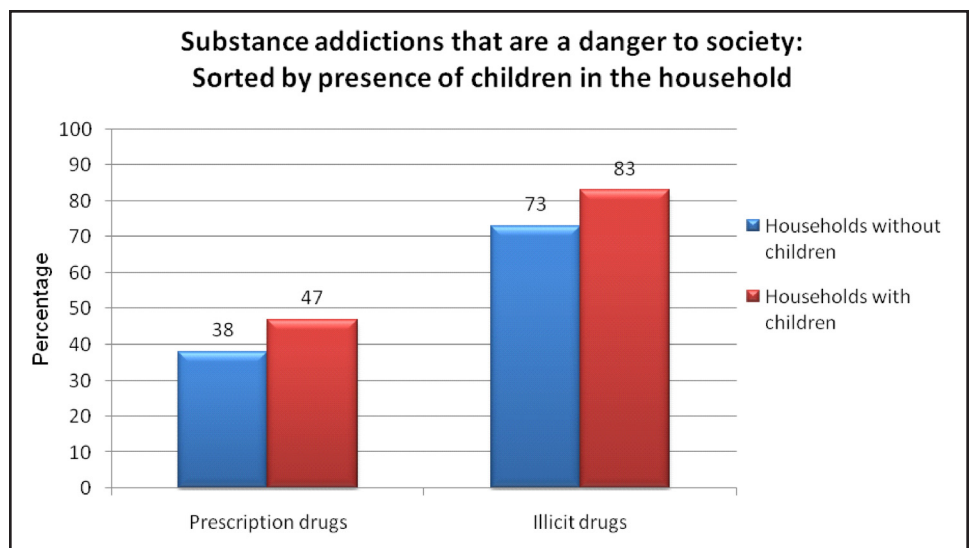

More than three-quarters (77%) of the American public believe that an individual with an addiction to illicit drugs such as heroin, cocaine, or methamphetamines is a danger to society. In contrast, only one-third (32%) of Americans believe that addiction to marijuana is a danger to society. Respondents are almost evenly split (48% believe it is a danger) on the issue of alcohol addiction.

Females are more likely than males to agree that addiction to any of the substances mentioned in the survey is a danger to society. The gender difference is most striking in relation to alcohol (40% of males and 55% of females) and prescription drugs (35% of males and 48% of females).

Overall, age is closely associated with agreement that addiction to marijuana is a danger to society. With a few exceptions, respondents in each age category became increasingly more likely to agree with the statement. More than twice the percentage of respondents age 65 and older (43%) agree that addiction to marijuana is a danger to society than do respondents age 18 to 24 (21%).

Although respondents from households with children are much more likely to view addiction to prescription drugs as a danger to society than do respondents from households without children (47% and 38%, respectively, a statistically significant difference), both segments of the population view addiction to illicit drugs as more of a danger than addiction to prescription drugs (83% and 73%, respectively).

Prevention

Question 7:

And how much do you agree or disagree that addiction to each of the following substances can be prevented?

- A. Marijuana
- B. Illicit drugs, such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines
- C. Alcohol
- D. Prescription drugs

Well over half of respondents agree with statements that addictions to marijuana, other illicit drugs, alcohol, and prescription drugs can be prevented. Specifically, 66% of respondents feel that addiction to illicit drugs can be prevented, 63% feel that addiction to marijuana can be prevented, 59% of respondents agree that addiction to alcohol could be prevented, and 58% agree that addiction to prescription drugs could be prevented.

Younger adults age 25-34 are significantly more likely to agree that addiction to marijuana, other illicit drugs, and alcohol can be prevented, in comparison to adults age 65 and older.

Respondents from households with children are also much more likely to agree that substance addictions can be prevented than are those without children.

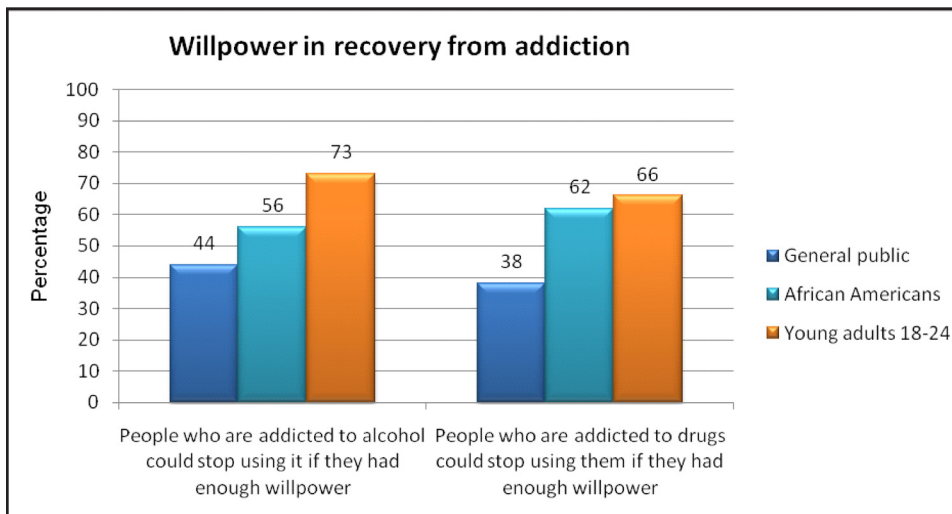

Question 8:

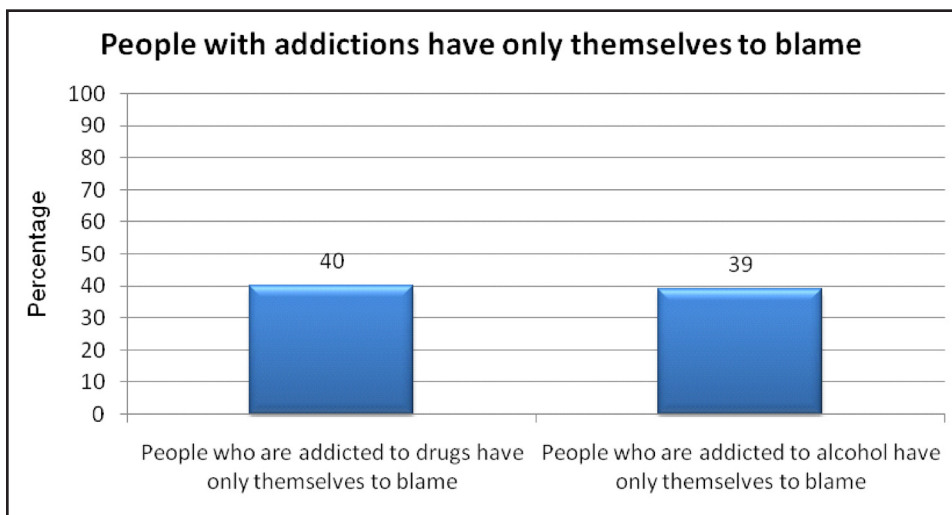

How much do you agree or disagree with each of the following statements?

- A. People who are addicted to alcohol could stop using it if they had enough willpower
- B. People who are addicted to drugs such as marijuana, heroin, or prescription drugs could stop using those substances if they had enough willpower
- C. People who are addicted to alcohol have only themselves to blame for their condition
- D. People who are addicted to drugs have only themselves to blame for their condition

Slightly less than half of the general public (44%) believes that people who are addicted to alcohol could stop using the substance if they had enough willpower. Even fewer (38%) believe that people who are addicted to drugs could stop using them if they had enough willpower. However, two population segments with statistically significant differences from the general public are African Americans and young adults age 18 to 24.² Both groups are much more likely than other population categories to believe addiction can be stopped by willpower.

There is little difference in the number of respondents agreeing with the statements that people addicted to drugs or alcohol have only themselves to blame.

²Please note that the above segments were determined independently from each other and should not be considered together.

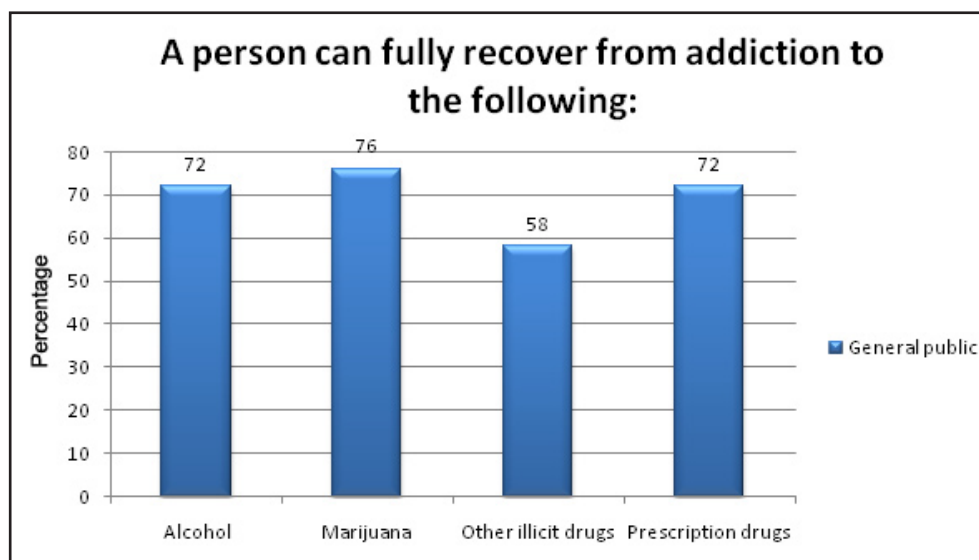

Recovery

Question 9:

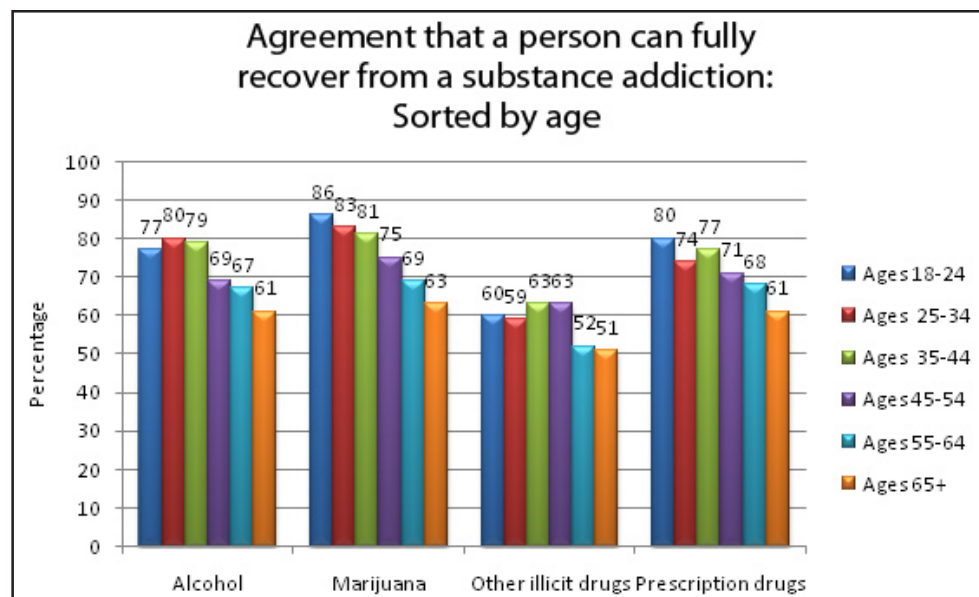

How much do you agree or disagree that a person can fully recover from addiction to each of the following substances?

- A. Alcohol
- B. Marijuana
- C. Illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines
- D. Prescription drugs

Approximately three-quarters of the population believe that recovery is possible from marijuana, alcohol, or prescription drugs. However, only 58% believe that a person can fully recover from addiction to other illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines.

In general, as Americans grow older, they are less likely to agree that recovery from substance addiction is possible. Women are more likely to agree than men (62% and 54%, respectively) that a person can fully recover from illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines.

African Americans are more likely than Caucasians and Hispanics to agree that a person can fully recover from an addiction to illicit drugs (73%, 68%, and 49%, respectively).

Respondents who make $50,000–$75,000 per year (78%) are more likely than respondents who make less than $25,000 per year (64%) to agree that a person can fully recover from addiction to prescription drugs. In the same vein, respondents with a college degree are much more likely than those who have not completed high school to agree that a person can fully recover from addiction to marijuana or to prescription drugs. Please note that the income and education variables have been analyzed independently and may be confounding.

Question 10:

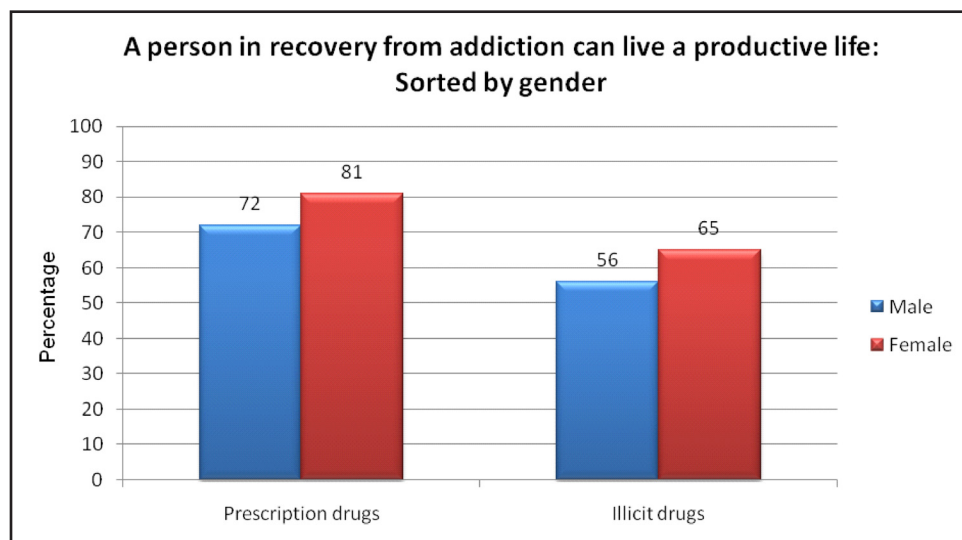

How much do you agree or disagree that a person in recovery from addiction to each of the following substances can live a productive life? (A productive life can mean holding a job, being successful in school, having your own home, and having meaningful relationships with friends and family).

- A. Alcohol
- B. Marijuana
- C. Illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines
- D. Prescription drugs

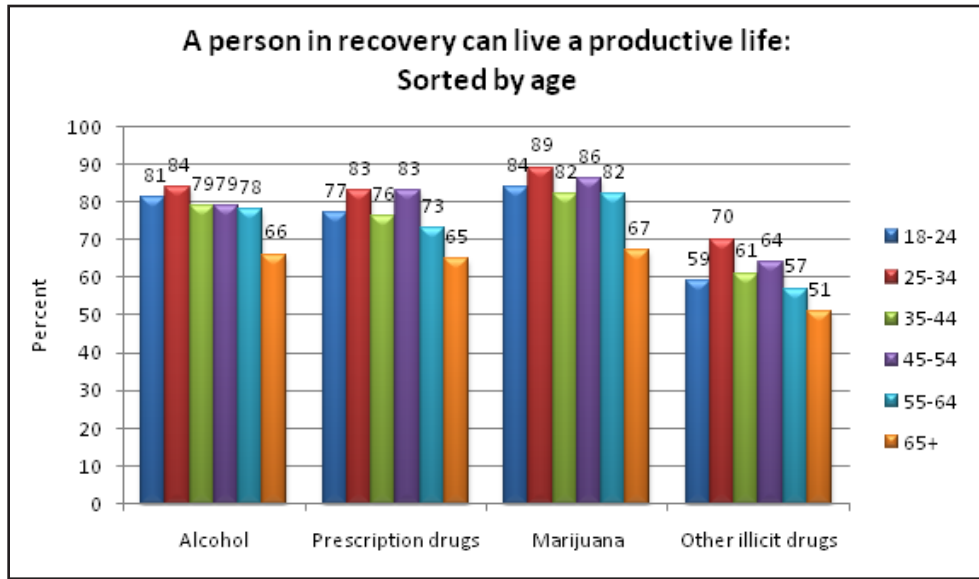

The majority of respondents agreed with the statement that people in recovery from addiction can live a productive life. Respondents feel most positive about people in recovery from addiction to marijuana, alcohol, and prescription drugs (82%, 78%, and 76%, respectively) than those in recovery from addiction to other illicit drugs such as cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamines (61%).

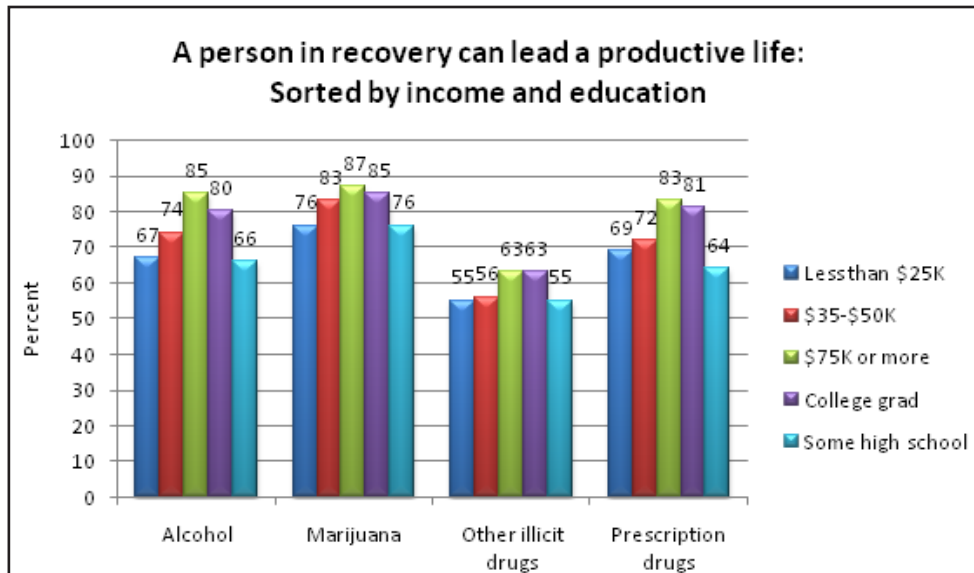

Women are more likely than men to agree that a person in recovery from an addiction to prescription drugs or illicit drugs can live a productive life.

Once again, respondents in the 25- to 34-year age bracket are the most positive that a person in recovery from addiction can go on to live a productive life. Those age 65 and older are the least positive.

Respondents who make $75,000 or more per year are more likely than any others to agree that a person in recovery from an addiction to marijuana, alcohol, or prescription drugs can live a productive life. A college degree is also positively associated with agreement that a person in recovery from alcohol or prescription drugs can lead a productive life. As mentioned previously, the income and education variables have been analyzed independently and may be confounding.

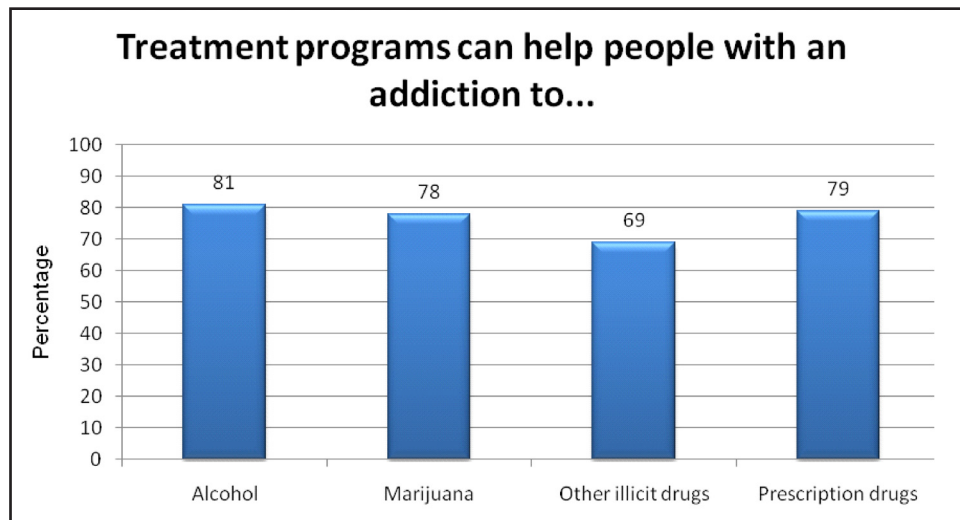

Households with children are more likely than those without children to agree that a person in recovery from addiction to illicit drugs can live a productive life (65% and 57%, respectively). The presence of children in the household has a negligible effect on the opinions of those in recovery from other addictions.

Question 11:

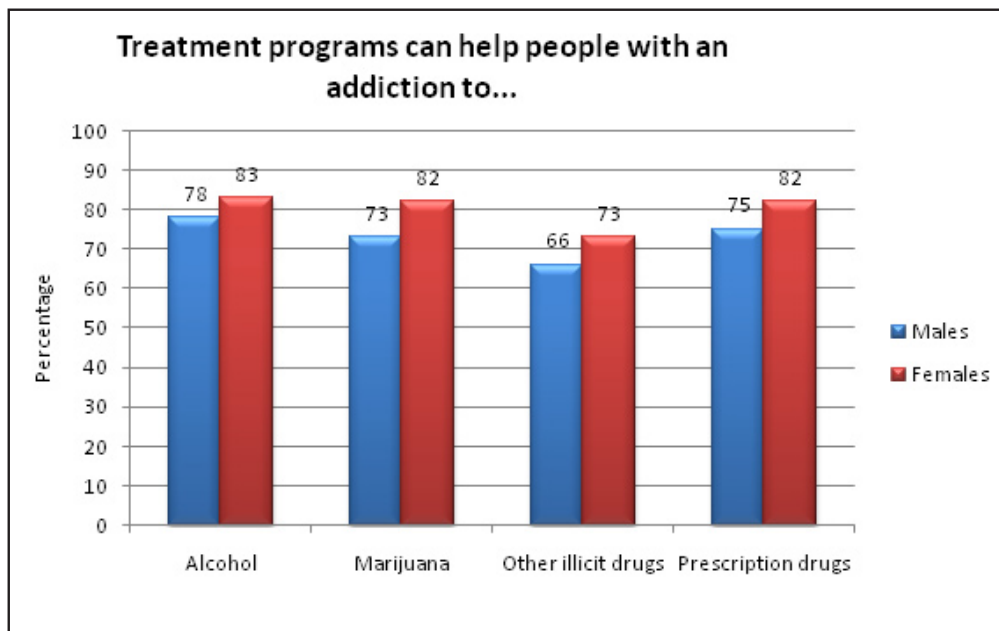

How much do you agree or disagree that treatment programs can help people with addiction to each of the following substances?

- A. Alcohol
- B. Marijuana
- C. Illicit drugs such as heroin, cocaine, or methamphetamines
- D. Prescription drugs

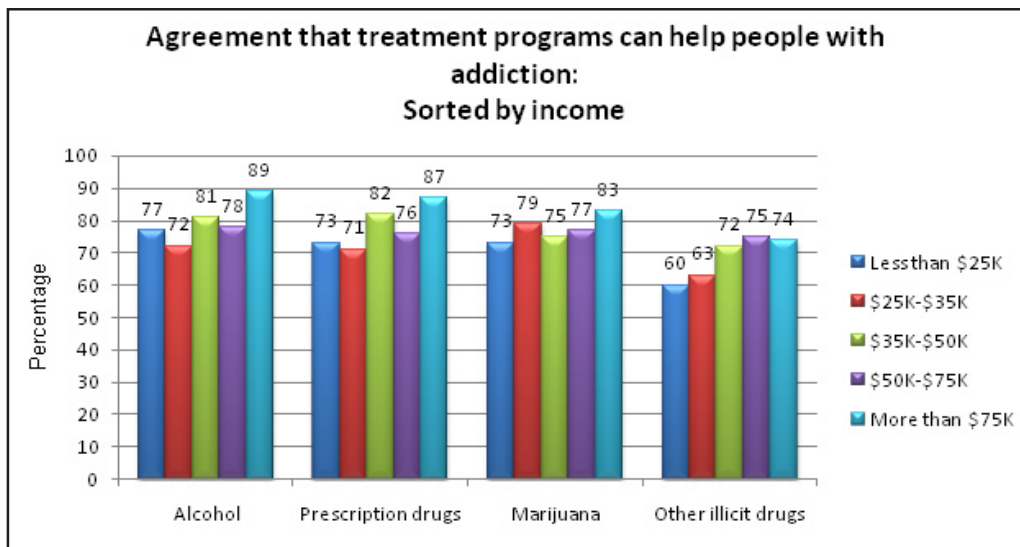

The percentage of Americans who agree that treatment programs can help people with substance addiction is slightly higher than the percentage of those who agree that people in recovery can live a productive life. Respondents see programs to help people with addiction to alcohol, marijuana, and prescription drugs more favorably than they see treatment programs to help people with addiction to other illicit drugs such as heroin, cocaine, or methamphetamines.

When considering addictions to alcohol, prescription drugs, marijuana, and other illicit drugs, women are more likely than men to agree that treatment programs can help people with those substance addictions. The differences are statistically significant for prescription drugs, marijuana, and other illicit drugs.

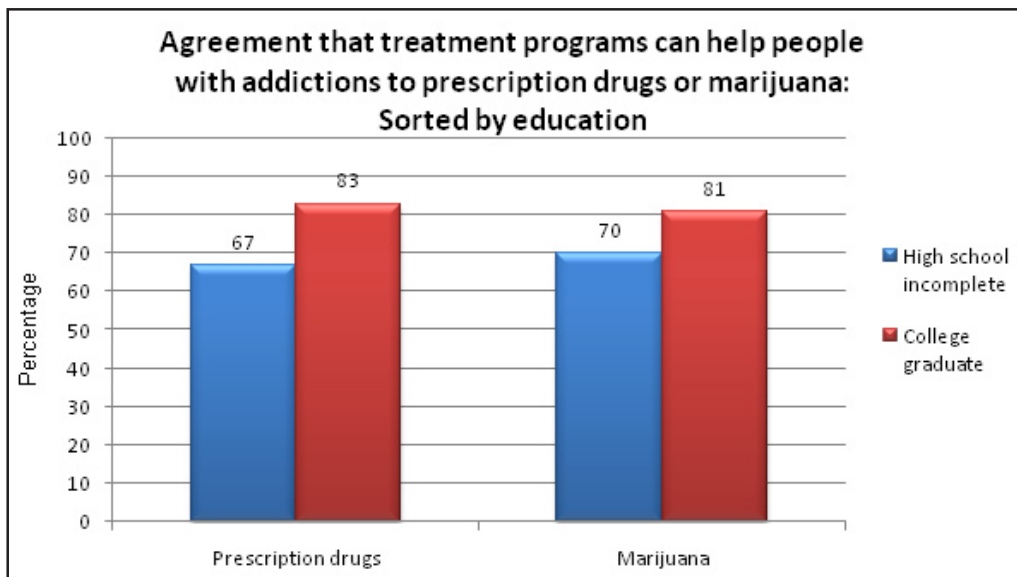

As in the previous question, age is negatively associated with agreement that programs can help people with addictions.

Respondents who make $75,000 per year or more are much more likely than those who make $35,000 per year or less to agree that treatment programs can help people with an addiction to alcohol, prescription drugs, or marijuana.

Similarly, college graduates are significantly more likely than respondents with less than a high school diploma to agree that treatment programs can help people with an addiction to prescription drugs (83% and 67%, respectively). Please note that the income and education variables have been analyzed independently and may be confounding.
